THE ASK: Not everyone is bold enough to go for dramatic, heavily veined tile — especially on their floors and walls — but author and antique collector Arnold Logan was ready to bring his 210-square-foot space over to the dark side. “Arnold has a fine appreciation for antiquity and he requested that the space look like it had evolved over time,” says interior designer Lisa Worth. The traditional envelope, including an existing wood-burning fireplace, stately mouldings and expansive windows overlooking 14 hectares of rolling hills in Aurora, Ont., were the building blocks for Lisa’s vision.

THE RESULT: “The projects that have the most visual impact are the ones where clients have pushed me out of my comfort zone,” says Lisa. Relocating the tub to face the sculptural limestone fireplace and swapping the location of the vanity and shower were both costly moves, but the improved flow was worth it. A custom walnut vanity, mirror and slatted wall next to the toilet complement the nailhead-detailed copper tub and hammered-copper sink. “We couldn’t do all copper fixtures,” says Lisa, “and I worried that brass would fight with the copper, so I looked to elegant polished nickel for the hardware and fixtures.” A Lucite chandelier was the finishing flourish to accentuate the 11-foot-high ceilings without stealing the spotlight from the tub.

“What I love most about this room is that it’s a living space – bathrooms can feel cold and austere, but this one has an intrinsic warmth”
